DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Roxbury Mill and Distillery site are located on both sides of Roxbury Road just west of the Antietam Creek south of Hagerstown. The buildings are in ruins in a scenic wooded area along the creek's edge. Ruins of two structures remain. One, believed to have been a large dwelling or hotel is located on the south side of the road. The other, also in ruins was a large stone building which operated presumably first as a mill and later as a distillery.

The first building appears to have had cut ashlar stone at its front elevation and more roughly coursed stone at its end walls. A segmentally arched cellar opening is located in the west end wall. Evidence remains of diagonally placed corner fireplaces inside the west end wall. Where wooden window frames remain they are narrow with wide wooden lintels at their tops.

The second building, the distillery located on the north side of the road, displays some rock faced ashlar stone on the remaining part of the front elevation. Some of this work would appear to date from the late 19th or early 20th century. Remaining in one corner of the building is a cylindrical brick structure presumably for part of the distillery process. Behind this structure is a stone lined raceway. Just to the east is a three arched stone bridge dating from 1824 and described in survey form WA-II-119.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Roxbury Mills and Distillery site is significant for its contribution to industrial and commercial growth during the 18th, 19th and 20th centuries in Washington County and for its scenic value as an area of wooded land along rocky steep banks of the Antietam Creek. A grist mill was in operation here during the late 18th century under ownership of John Shafer who migrated to Washington County from Lebanon County, Pennsylvania. Apparently the grist mill and a nearby saw mill were in operation through much of the 19th century, being listed under the ownership of Rowland in 1859 and Cook in 1877. The Roxbury Distillery company seems to have been established during the late 19th or early 20th century. According to Helen Ashe Hays in her book The Antietam and Its Bridges, the old stone mill was reused as one of the bonding houses.

It is not known from information available at present what role was played by the large stone building which stood on the south side of the road. It is marked as a dwelling on 19th century maps, but is said by local historians to have been a hotel.

The Roxbury Distillery Company changed hands many times during the early 20th century. See deeds 116/209, 141/542, 143/226, 143/351, 154/136, 168/192.
